Committee Forms to Combat Zebra Mussels

In our last newsletter we shared that zebra mussels (ZM) were discovered in Kimble Lake in November. An observant lake service provider alerted us after seeing ZM on a lift he was removing.

A joint KHLA and KLID committee has been created to coordinate mitigation efforts resulting from this discovery. We'd like to provide an update on the steps this committee has taken to protect and preserve our beautiful lake.

The Fishing House

When Siri Undlin was artist in residence in Paonia, Colorado between June and October, she wrote a story that may sound familiar, especially since it features Kimble Lake and a couple of its residents. Siri is the daughter of Marsh and Martha Pechauer. The story begins like this:

In the land of 10,000 lakes, you grow up knowing certain things - like, if your nostrils freeze together, that doesn't mean school will be cancelled. Always pack an extra blanket in case your car doesn't start. Mosquito repellent can save your life. You know every season by heart and by smell. There is nothing more sacred than fresh water; pine trees are sticky; prairie grass attracts butterflies.

Siri also has a blog called tatterhoodblog.com you may want to check out. There you'll find stories from the time she was on a year-long, solo Fellowship Grant (T. Watson) trek in all northern European countries plus Argentina. While you're at it, visit her website at siriundlin.com to hear her beautiful songs.

It'll Be a Cold Day in ...

... December to turn Kimble Lake's water into ice. It's official: Kimble Lake froze over on December 10!

Hey Snowbirds!

Thought you might want a glimpse of what you're missing! Thanks to Maxine for sending in these photos of our first snow.
